Denver Health Research Study

Denver Health is planning to do a research study to see if giving plasma to trauma patients during ambulance transport versus arrival at the hospital will help reduce bleeding. This study is different than other research studies because it includes patients who cannot give consent because of traumatic injuries. Subjects may be enrolled into this study without their consent unless they have visible OPT OUT items available FREE from Denver Health.

The study is sponsored by the Department of Defense's Telemedicine & Advanced Technology Research Center (TATRC).

Study Dates

March 2013 — March 2016
